Brand Campaigns

Concept-driven work built from a client brief through to execution. Direction, edit, and strategy behind each project.

Fitz

Brief

Energetic, yet romantic. A tone that could hold both without undercutting either.

Execution

Built the spot around a couple's exchange, letting warmth carry the energy instead of competing with it, so the product sits inside a feeling rather than interrupting one.

Role

Direction, edit, pacing, b-roll integration.

Kim's Chips

Brief

Unpredictable, catchy, something that gets people talking.

Execution

Built the entire spot around a single surprise mechanic rather than a straightforward product shot. The kind of hook designed to be replayed and mentioned, not just watched once.

Role

Direction, edit, VFX timing, sound design.

Ariel

Brief

Sell family, and the instinct to protect kids.

Execution

Framed the story around parental care rather than the product itself. Stain removal as evidence of that care, not the headline.

Role

Direction, edit, color, b-roll sequencing.

Alvique: A Launch in Two Parts

Brief

Introduce a new product, then sell the feeling of using it.

Execution

Split the launch into two deliberate pieces. An aesthetic film to make the introduction itself feel like an event, followed by a lifestyle/creator piece to carry the emotional sell once the product was already known.

Role

Direction, concept, edit (both pieces), product styling (launch film).

Aesthetic launch film

Lifestyle / creator follow-up

Soles&Lifestyle

Brief

Launch a new footwear design.

Execution

Sold confidence, aura, and feeling instead of specs or the shoe itself. Branding the identity of wearing it, not the product.

Role

Direction, edit, pacing, color.
